

2021 Decanter World Wine Awards: Record-breaking year for medals and first Platinum medal for Chinese dry white wine

China enjoyed a record-breaking year, winning 156 medals across all wine styles and categories

7 JULY, LONDON: An oaked Chardonnay from Beijing became the first Chinese dry white wine to win a Platinum medal in the Decanter World Wine Awards (DWWA), which announced this year's results today (7th July).

The world's largest wine competition, Decanter World Wine Awards (DWWA), announced the results for its 2021 judging today. Chinese wines achieved a record total of 156 medals, including one Platinum and four Golds.

First Platinum for Chinese dry white

Afip A8 Chardonnay 2018 from Château Changyu won a Platinum medal in this year's competition, the highest award won so far by Chinese dry white wines in the history of the Decanter World Wine Awards.

Harvested by hand, the Afip A8 Chardonnay has been through a minimum of six months of oak aging. DWWA judges commented it as being an 'eloquent and elegant Chardonnay', 'skilfully placed; oak more an observer than a player'.

Last year, the 2017 vintage of the same wine won a Silver medal in DWWA, showcasing its sustained quality.

As part of the DWWA judging process, the Chardonnay was first awarded a Gold medal in the first round of blind tasting by expert judges. During the second round of judging, the Chinese dry white stood out from Gold-winning wines of the same category from Asia to achieve the Platinum medal.

Three other oaked-Chardonnays from China won Silver medals in the 2021 DWWA; Xiao Feng Chardonnay 2017 from Helan Mountain in Ningxia, Tiansai

Vineyards' Skyline of Gobi Reserve Chardonnay 2019 and T20 Chardonnay 2019 from Yanqi, Xinjiang province.

In the last two decades, China has been better known for its thirst of red wine production and consumption.

However, 'Chinese producers' know-how for making quality dry white wines is maturing fast,' said Professor Li Demei, Chinese wine authority and DecanterChina.com columnist.

'One of the signs being that producers no longer pursue (excessive) oak flavours. This is in line with market research we have conducted at Beijing University of Agriculture, which showed that consumers who had little wine knowledge don't tend to appreciate oak flavours well.

'Chinese winemakers have responded to the market needs and started to establish their own styles. There are now a number of quality dry whites made by wineries from Yanqi Basin of Xinjiang, Helan Mountain East of Ningxia, Huailai of Hebei and the Shandong Peninsula.'

Professor Li anticipated a comeback of white wines to the Chinese market, as consumers are returning to former wine drinking habits. 'In fact, before 1996, white wines had once dominated the market. White wines, in many ways, have better affinity to Chinese food and its dining culture (than reds).'

Four Gold medals

When asked about standout regions in this year's awards, DWWA co-chair Ronan Sayburn MS commented, 'it's always interesting to see China getting more and more medals, and Asia increasing every year.'

A total of four Chinese wines won a Gold medal in the 2021 DWWA, all of which came from Helan Mountain East, Ningxia, providing further proof to the region's potential as the country's leading force in making fine wines.

Yuanrun's Petit Manseng 2019 won the single Gold medal for Chinese sweet wines in this year's DWWA. The judges enjoyed its 'explosion of tropical fruit' and 'an immensely appealing, sapid finish'.

From Greatwall's Chateau Terroir, 1266 Cabernet Sauvignon displayed a 'mature but not tiring' flavour profile with its 2016 vintage, praised by the judges as 'a glittering Chinese star'.

Organic producer Redelion hauled two Gold medals in this year's awards. The judges appreciated its Mccoys Syrah 2019 from Helan Mountain East, noting that it was 'polished to a higher level by a light kiss of oak'.

The producer's Marselan1961 2019 with its 'elegant and remarkable' fruit expression further demonstrated the potential of Marselan, a variety deemed as one of the potential 'signature grapes' of China.

The regional ranking - medal records broken

A record total of 156 Chinese wines were awarded a medal this year, a significant uptake from last year's 120. In addition to the Platinum and Golds, the country was awarded 36 Silver medals and 115 Bronze medals. The medals won by region are as follows.

Ningxia 66 (including four Golds)
Shandong 27
Xinjiang 20
Hebei 18
Jilin 4
Liaoning 4
Yunnan 4
Shaanxi 4
Beijing 3 (including a Platinum)
Sichuan 2
Shanxi 1
Tibet 1
Other regions 2

Again, Ningxia led the Chinese wine region ranking with 66 medals (4 Golds, 14 Silvers and 48 Bronzes), with Cabernet Sauvignon-dominant red wines performing exceptionally well.

Meanwhile, producers from the sun-drenched Helan Mountain East are exploring the possibility of fine reds beyond Bordeaux varieties, with single varietals and blends made using Marselan, Syrah, Pinot Noir, Sangiovese and Malbec also gaining medals.

Besides dry red wines, the more humid and moderate Shandong peninsula now becomes a hub of quality sweet wines, with five Petit Manseng from Qingdao, Penglai and Weihai winning Silver and Bronze medals. The region is also home to two Bronze medal winning sparkling wines using Pinot Noir and Chardonnay respectively.

Ice wines from Northeastern China continued their medal haul at DWWA. Five of them, made from either the indigenous Beijinghong red grape or Vidal, were awarded Silver medals in this year's awards.

The 2021 Decanter World Wine Awards

Now in its 18th anniversary, the 2021 Decanter World Wine Awards saw 18,094 wines from 56 countries and regions entering the competition.

The entrants were tasted blind by more than 160 expert judges, including 44 Masters of Wine and 11 Master Sommeliers, during the two-week judging period.

Gold, Silver and Bronze medals are awarded during the first round of judging. Gold medal winners are then qualified for a regional competition towards Platinum medals. The final round of blind tasting only involves Platinum winners and only those that stand out are rewarded with the top accolade of the competition - Best in Show.

In the 2021 DWWA, less than 1% of the wines entering the awards achieved the Platinum medal, while only 0.28% were awarded Best in Show.
